The Washington navy yard is supplying the navy's shortage in cartridge cases for three and four-inch shells, and is turning out about 1,500 cases per week, according to testimony before the House Committee on Appropriations by Rear Admiral Joseph Strauss, chief of the Bureau of Ordnance.

Admiral Strauss revealed that the navy yard is working three shifts of men per day on these cartridge cases The House Committee made public today the hearings on "the additional urgent deficiency appropriation bill," which contains more than $2,500,000 for emergency uses in the navy. A part of the money allotted the Bureau of Ordnance is to be used in purchasing material for the manufacture of cartridge cases, in which there has been a shortage.

Admiral Strauss explained that cartridge cases for three and four-inch projectiles weigh about thirty pounds each, and that the navy manufactures all of these cases. Each shell costs from $3.50 to $4, the high cost of copper being the chief cause of this expense.
